An education you can put to work

An education you can put to work.

If you're like most students, you're already looking ahead to life after graduation. With a degree from Tufts' Public Health program, and you'll find yourself prepared to enter the job force with a valuable competitive edge.

Classroom learning. Real-world application.

It starts in the classroom, where every aspect of your experience encourages diverse viewpoints, thoughtful debate, and practical application of coursework. While at Tufts you'll find a host of opportunities to bring your skills into the real world, and will complete an Applied Learning Experience (ALE) that empowers you to craft a real-world public health project.

“The skills I learned for my ALE have helped me understand how to manage a project from start to finish, effectively communicate with funders, and create and follow a timeline.”

– Lauren Kaskey (MPH 13), former manager of the Boston Public School's Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Program

Career services. Exceptional outcomes.

As a student, you'll also have access to our exceptional Career Services team, which offers a range of coaching, job placement, and support – before graduation and beyond. We're proud that over the last five years our graduates have enjoyed a 97% average employment rate.

“Make sure you take advantage of the services and network available to you. Connect with your professors, your classmates, and the people who work in Career Services. Go to Career Services' workshops, networking events, and get help on your résumé.”

– Ally Carlton-Smith (MS), executive editor, Student Health 101
